

Foreword

It's a matter of immense pleasure that our campus, Tikapur Multiple Campus, Research Management Cell (RMC), has been able to release the fifth volume of our Journal-'Journal of Tikapur Multiple Campus, among the valued readers. This issue is one of the affirmations of our unflagging commitment to bring out the latent capabilities of academics and professionals to speed up the research hunt and hone professional knowledge, skill, and development. We believe that our attempt has been able to awaken the professionals a bit to engage in higher education and poke them to research, write and disseminate. It is our fervent belief that such ongoing endeavors and practices could add significant impetus to research culture among teaching professionals and research scholars. This volume has been the product of a rigorous process of double-blind review, intensive editing, and copy editing by a group of scholars in the respective genres.

This volume consists of fifteen articles from a diverse field of study in the Nepali and English language. The area of articles ranges from Economics, Development Studies, and Applied Science, Language, Literature, Marketing, and Social Sciences. Most of the articles are written, drawing empirical data. However, we have also included some literature-based and non-empirical articles. We believe that the issues that the authors have raised and discussed in the articles are significant to enhance knowledge in the respective genres. Most importantly, the articles will be useful references for policymakers, planners, curriculum designers, teacher educators, experts, and emerging scholars in the field.

From the beginning to the final stage of this journal publication, many known and unknown scholars and personnel have helped us for bringing this into this present form. We extend our gratitude to all those who helped us, including, Mr. Keshar Bahadur Kunwar, Campus Chief; Prof Dr. Lal Prasad Amgain, Dean, Faculty of Agriculture Science, Far Western University for their generous support and coordination in this endeavor. Similarly, we are indebted to the authors, the reviewers, the members of the editorial board, the copy editor, the managing editor, and the members of Research Management Cell (RMC) for their untiring effort. We also extend our sincere gratitude to the University Grants Commission, Sanothimi Bhaktapur for magnanimous support for the growth of Tikapur Multiple Campus and the publication of this journal. We are indebted to Tikapur Multiple Campus for this academic initiative, priority to this scholarly task, and financial support. Last but not the least, the words of appreciation goes to Mr. Subin Raj Pandey for attractive layout.

We have left no stone unturned to bring the issue errorless, however, the chances of human error cannot be denied. We will heartily appreciate and welcome comments and suggestions for the improvements in the next issue.

Thank you!
